

A GOOD SIGN: Djiru Elder Pastor John Andy and Cassowary Coast Regional Council Mayor Bill Shannon unveiled the new Clump Point Lookout sign in front of a gathering of 80 people.

Community shows support for Clump Point sign

The new Clump Point Lookout sign was unveiled at the site where the original was stolen 12 months ago.

Sign organiser Janine Ewens said the local community and businesses were generous in supporting the raffle to fund the replacement of the sign.

"I felt the sign needed to be put back in place to show the Djiru People, the Traditional Land Owners, we care and acknowledge the importance of the land," Ms Ewens said.

"With the backing I received, it was very clear that a lot of people felt the same as me.

"A special thanks to Shirley and Terry Keven who covered the cost of the sign during the fundraising process.

"The Cassowary Coast Regional Council have also showed tremendous support and contributed $520 towards the project.

"All the speeches on the day were very heart warming and Pastor John Andy showed his appreciation to the people of Mission Beach for caring for the land and the Djiru People.

"It was a clear message of reconciliation at its best."

HEARTWARMING: Pastor John Andy thanked the people of Mission Beach for their support and care of the land of the Djiru people at the Clump Point sign unveiling. The original sign was erected in 2006 and stolen 12 months ago.
